When Sheriff Hopkins took office in January, 1885, Nagle was appointed as a deputy sheriff, and served during the administration. He next went to the license collector's office, under Collector Tim O'Brien and remained until July, 1888, when he was appointed deputy in the United States marshal's office. When Terry made the assault on Marshal Franks last September Nagle was on hand and disarmed the irate judge. The reports circulated that Terry intended doing Judge Field some injury when they met, caused Nagle to act as a body guard to him.
